

MOHD AMAR MOHAMED
v. PEGUAM NEGARA MALAYSIA & ANOR

HIGH COURT MALAYA, SHAH ALAM
SHAHNAZ SULAIMAN J
[JUDICIAL REVIEW NO: BA-25-73-12-2023]
11 NOVEMBER 2024

Abstract – (i) The fact that an alleged offender is charged in the Sessions Court does not prevent the Attorney General/Public Prosecutor from exercising prosecutorial discretion, as s. 254(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code allows discontinuation of proceedings (nolle prosequi) at any stage before judgment. There is also no requirement under the law which imposes any legal duty on the prosecution to give any reason in allowing and/or rejecting a representation made by an alleged offender; (ii) To proceed with judicial review, an applicant must provide strong and compelling evidence to meet the high threshold required. If there is no clear evidence showing that the impugned decision is made irrationally or unreasonably, the necessary legal threshold to challenge is not met.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW: Judicial review – Leave to commence proceedings – Seeking to challenge prosecution’s decision to apply for acquittal and discharge of alleged sexual assault offender in criminal case – Failure of prosecution to provide sufficient basis, reason or particulars to support making of impugned decision – Whether prosecution acted ultra vires art. 145(3) of Federal Constitution and s. 254 of Criminal Procedure Code – Whether impugned decision amenable to judicial review – Whether necessary legal threshold to challenge impugned decision met – Rules of Court 2012, O. 53 r. 3(1)

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE: Proceedings – Discontinuation of proceedings – Prosecution’s decision to apply for acquittal and discharge of alleged sexual assault offender in criminal case – Failure of prosecution to provide sufficient basis, reason or particulars to support making of impugned decision – Whether prosecution acted ultra vires art. 145(3) of Federal Constitution and s. 254 of Criminal Procedure Code

This application was for leave to commence judicial review proceedings, pursuant to O. 53 r. 3(1) of the Rules of Court 2012, pertaining to the decision of the first respondent. The first respondent had applied for a ‘discharge amounting to an acquittal’ of the second respondent in a criminal case pursuant to art. 145(3) of the Federal Constitution (‘FC’) and s. 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code (‘CPC’) (‘impugned decision’). The applicant had lodged a police report against the second respondent on allegations of sexual assault on his daughter, S1. The second respondent was subsequently

A charged under s. 14(a) of the Sexual Offences Against Children 2017 at the Sessions Court. During the case management, the Deputy Public Prosecutor applied for an acquittal and discharge ('A&D') of the second respondent. The Sessions Court Judge granted the A&D in the criminal case against the second respondent. In this application for leave to commence judicial review
B proceedings, the applicant sought to challenge the Public Prosecutor's decision to apply for an acquittal and discharge of the second respondent in a criminal case against the second respondent. The applicant submitted, inter alia; (i) the first respondent had acted ultra vires art. 145(3) of the FC and s. 254 of the CPC; and (ii) the first respondent had failed to provide the
C applicant with sufficient basis, reason or particulars to support the making of the impugned decision since he was the complainant in the criminal case and the first respondent had endangered the safety of children by taking into consideration one side's position only. The Attorney General objected to this application for leave to commence judicial review proceedings on the grounds that the impugned decision was not amenable to judicial review.

D Held (dismissing application);

- (1) The fact that the second respondent was charged in the Sessions Court did not prevent the first respondent (the Attorney General/Public Prosecutor) from exercising prosecutorial discretion, as s. 254(1) of the E CPC allows discontinuation of proceedings at any stage before the judgment. Since the judgment was not yet delivered, the first respondent was within his discretion to seek an A&D. Although the applicant argued that the first respondent exceeded his powers, they did not specify how or provide compelling prima facie evidence to support this
F claim. (para 39)
- (2) The applicant's argument, that the impugned decision violated Public Prosecutor's Direction No. 2/2019, was unfounded and lacked merit. The direction did not categorically prevent the first respondent from applying for an A&D. There was no requirement under the law which
G imposed any legal duty on the first respondent to give any reason in allowing and/or rejecting the representation made by the second respondent. (paras 39 & 40)
- (3) There was nothing in the application to form a compelling prima facie evidence that the first respondent had acted in contravention of the direction, or any law for that matter, so as to overcome the strong
H presumption of legality in his making of the impugned decision. (para 42)
- (4) To proceed with judicial review, the applicant must provide strong, initial evidence to meet the high threshold required at this stage, especially given the deference to the Public Prosecutor's discretion in
I such matters. There was nothing to suggest that the first respondent had improperly considered the second respondent's representation. There was no clear evidence in the applicant's affidavit showing that the decision was made irrationally or unreasonably. Therefore, the necessary legal threshold to challenge the impugned decision had not been met. (paras 43 & 44)

A Test For Granting Leave

[11] The law of judicial review has been elucidated particularly to its purpose and extent in the Federal Court's decision in SIS Forum (Malaysia) v. Kerajaan Negeri Selangor; Majlis Agama Islam Selangor (Intervener) [2022] 3 CLJ 339; [2022] 3 MLRA 219 where Her Ladyship Tengku Maimun Tuan

B Mat CJ stated:

Judicial review is a core tenet of the rule of law which is inextricably linked to the notion of constitutional supremacy in a democratic form of Government. This was because a core feature of the rule of law is the doctrine of separation of powers, a corollary to which is the concept of check and balance. Judicial review – whether constitutional review or statutory review – is a fundamental aspect of check and balance and is the vehicle through which the judicial branch of Government can perform its constitutional function vis-à-vis the other branches of Government. The judicial power of the Federation which includes judicial review (constitutional and statutory) is vested by constitutional design solely in the two High Courts.

D [12] Pertaining to the test in granting leave for judicial review, the Federal Court in WRP Asia Pacific Sdn Bhd v. Tenaga Nasional Bhd [2012] MLRA 257 held that the test for leave to commence judicial review are as follows:

E [12] ...Without the need to go into depth of the abundant authorities, suffice if we state that leave may be granted if the leave application is not thought of as frivolous, and if leave is granted, an arguable case in favour of granting the relief sought at the substantive hearing may be the resultant outcome. A rider must be attached to the application though ie unless the matter for judicial review is amenable to judicial review absolutely no success may be envisaged.

F (emphasis added)

[13] In Bandar Utama Development Sdn Bhd & Anor v. Lembaga Lebuhraya Malaysia & Anor [1997] 4 CLJ 725; [1998] 1 MLJ 224 His Lordship Visu Sinnadurai J at p. 225 held as follows:

G ... The court, in exercising its discretion that an application for leave be granted must be convinced by the applicants that prima facie the application is genuine and that there is some substance in the grounds supporting the application. The test's threshold is very low; a prima facie case of reasonable suspicion, an arguable case must be shown, not a prima facie case. Additionally, an application must fail if it is frivolous, vexatious, misconceived, made by busybodies with misguided or trivial complaints of administrative errors, groundless, where there are more appropriate alternative remedies, and where the application for judicial remedies is inappropriate.

H (emphasis added)

I [14] In summary, although the standard for granting permission is not stringent, an applicant wishing to obtain permission must meet the following requirements:

(i) demonstrate that the application is not frivolous;

- (ii) prove that the application is not vexatious; and A
- (iii) establish that it warrants further consideration during the substantive stage.

[15] Founded on these principles, this court will consider this application to commence leave for judicial review. B

Objection By The Attorney General

[16] It was submitted by learned Senior Federal Counsel that when the Attorney General appears at leave stage, the Attorney General appears not for the respondent, but in the capacity as Attorney General. (See: Kijal Resort Sdn Bhd v. Pentadbir Tanah Kemaman & Anor [2015] 3 CLJ 861; [2016] 1 MLJ 544). C

[17] Senior Federal Counsel submitted that the role of Attorney General at the leave stage is to assist the court in sieving out frivolous applications by appraising the court of any particular features of the case that would disqualify leave being granted. D

[18] In this application for leave to commence judicial review proceedings, the applicant is seeking to challenge the Public Prosecutor's decision to apply for an acquittal and discharge of the second respondent in a criminal case against the second respondent. E

[19] The Attorney General is objecting to this application for leave to commence judicial review proceedings on the grounds that the impugned decision is not amenable to judicial review.

[20] In support of this argument, learned Senior Federal Counsel submitted that post the Federal Court decision in Sundra Rajoo Nadarajah v. Menteri Luar Negeri, Malaysia & Ors [2021] 6 CLJ 199; [2021] 5 MLJ 209, the exercise of the Attorney General/Public Prosecutor's discretion under art. 145(3) of the Federal Constitution is susceptible to judicial review, but only in the narrowest circumstances and subject to a higher and more stringent threshold of scrutiny. F
G

[21] In coming to this position, the Federal Court had considered the cases of Teh Cheng Poh v. PP [1978] CLJU 202; [1978] 1 LNS 202; [1979] 1 MLJ 50; Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister For The Civil Service [1985] AC 374 and Lim Kit Siang v. Dato' Seri Dr Mahathir Mohamad [1987] CLJ (Rep) 168; [1987] 1 CLJ 40; [1987] 1 MLJ 383. H

[22] In Teh Cheng Poh (supra), the Privy Council reviewed whether the Public Prosecutor had lawfully exercised his discretion in prosecuting an offence under sub-s. 57(1) of the Internal Security Act 1960 (ISA). Lord Diplock ruled that the Public Prosecutor had the authority to choose among the ISA, the Arms Act 1960, and the Firearms (Increased Penalties) Act 1971 for prosecution. As no evidence suggested misuse of this discretion, the charge against the appellant was upheld. I

A [23] In Ramalingam Ravinthran v. Attorney General [2012] 2 SLR 49, the Singapore Court of Appeal's stated:

B 24 ... Relevant factors for the Prosecution's consideration in making prosecutorial decisions include the available evidence, public interest considerations, the personal circumstances of the offender, the offender's degree of culpability, etc. Where these factors apply differently to different offenders, this would justify differential treatment between them. The only qualifications stated in Teh Cheng Poh are that there must be no bias on the Prosecution's part and irrelevant considerations must not be taken into account.

C 25 In applying the aforesaid criteria to the facts of Teh Cheng Poh, the Privy Council observed (at 56) that "there [was] no material on which to found an argument that in the instant case [the Malaysian AttorneyGeneral] exercised [the prosecutorial discretion] unlawfully". In other words, the Privy Council stated that a mere allegation that the Malaysian Attorney-General had exercised his prosecutorial power unlawfully, unsupported by evidence, could not engage Art 8(1) of the Malaysian Constitution. Although the actual outcome in Teh Cheng Poh was ultimately based on other grounds, it was implicit in this finding that if the appellant had somehow been able to produce evidence that the Attorney-General of Malaysia had not given unbiased consideration to his case or had taken into account irrelevant considerations in deciding to charge him with a capital offence, art. 8(1) of the Malaysian Constitution would have been infringed.

E 26 Hence, Teh Cheng Poh stands for the principle that (in our local context) the Attorney-General may not exercise his prosecutorial power under art. 35(8) of the Constitution in breach of art. 12(1) (or, for that matter, in breach of any other fundamental liberty set out in Pt IV of the Constitution) – but, if the offender alleges such a breach has occurred in his case, the burden lies on him to produce evidence of the alleged breach ...

F 27 That the burden of proof lies on the offender in this regard is a wholly trite proposition that is reflected in s. 103(1) of the Evidence Act, which states that "[w]hoever desires any court to give judgment as to any legal right or liability, dependent on the existence of facts which he asserts, must prove that those facts exist". In constitutional challenges to the prosecutorial discretion based on an alleged breach of one or more of the fundamental liberties enshrined in the Constitution, it is only when enough evidence is adduced to show a prima facie breach that the evidential burden will be shifted to the Attorney-General to justify his prosecutorial decision.

(emphasis added)

H [24] In Teh Cheng Poh (supra) and Ramalingam (supra), it was established that any challenge to the Public Prosecutor's exercise of discretion requires evidence that the discretion was exercised unlawfully. In the landmark Sundra Rajoo (supra) case, the Federal Court, led by the Chief Justice, considered this principle, emphasising that it should align with traditional grounds for judicial review as defined in Council of Civil Service Unions (supra).
I The court further underscored that the Public Prosecutor must exercise discretion in good faith, professionally, lawfully, and with regard to public interest, as reinforced in Lim Kit Siang (supra).

[25] Drawing from these principles, the Federal Court concluded that the Public Prosecutor's discretion under art. 145(3) cannot be unrestricted, as that would undermine the rule of law. However, making it entirely open to judicial review with a low threshold for leave could breach the separation of powers and harm public interest. To maintain a balance among these interrelated factors, a two-step threshold test was established. In this regard, the Federal Court in Sundra Rajoo (supra) held as follows:

[96] The AG/PP by constitutional design has access to the police, investigation papers and other core decisive material which ultimately factor into his decision to charge or not to charge a person or to otherwise discontinue proceedings. The AG/PP is the guardian of public interest and so he factors not just the law and legal principles but also matters relevant to public policy and national security. The courts, also by constitutional design, do not have the same benefit. Such design is inherent in the mechanism of our adversarial system which is grounded or rooted in the doctrine of separation of powers. Some degree of judicial deference to executive discretion of the AG/PP is necessary so as not to stymie our justice system.

[97] Deference does not however translate to complete surrender. Ours is a system built on constitutional supremacy where accountability, separation of powers and rule of law take centre stage. Much headway has been made in our constitutional jurisprudence to curate the fine balance between policy considerations on the one side, and the adjudication and supervision of the legality of State action by the judicial branch – on the other. This gradual shift from unfettered discretion to restricted supervision is apparent from the judgment of this court in Peguam Negara Malaysia v. Chin Chee Kow & Another Appeal [2019] 4 CLJ 561; [2019] 3 MLJ 443 (“Chin Chee Kow”).

[109] That said, we accept that at stake in all review cases is the notion that the courts must be cautious not to run awry of the fine dividing line of the doctrine of separation of powers. In this regard, while the AG/PP's powers are reviewable, the AG/PP's discretion under art. 145(3) of the FC, as a matter of policy, remains subject to a higher threshold of scrutiny ...

(emphasis added)

[26] The Federal Court in Sundra Rajoo (supra) emphasised the Public Prosecutor's discretion under art. 145(3) is cloaked with a strong presumption of legality. Pertaining to this, the Federal Court held as follows:

[113] In all challenges against the decisions of the AG/PP exercising his powers under art. 145(3) of the FC, the position is that his decisions are cloaked with the presumption of legality. The onerous burden lies on the challenging party to overcome the strong presumption of legality with compelling prima facie evidence of grounds to review the AG/PP's decision within the recognised reasons for judicial review.

(emphasis added)

A [27] The Federal Court then developed a two-step threshold test that must be met at the leave stage for any application challenging the strong presumption of legality in the Public Prosecutor's discretion under art. 145(3) as reproduced below:

B [114] Based on the foregoing authorities, it can be surmised that any challenge must therefore pass a two-step threshold which must be satisfied at the leave stage of any application for judicial review.

C [115] Firstly, the burden of proof lies on the applicant. The applicant will have to show that he has a legal basis to challenge the decision of the AG/PP. This refers to the traditional grounds of judicial review and other bases implicitly recognised by the earlier judgments on this subject, including but not limited to:

- (i) illegality;
- (ii) procedural impropriety (eg, breach of the rules of natural justice);
- D (iii) irrationality (considering irrelevant considerations or ignoring relevant and material considerations); and
- (iv) mala fides.

E [116] Once the above legal grounds or any of them are clearly set out, the applicant will then have to adduce compelling and prima facie proof that the decision or omission of the AG/PP falls within those grounds or any one of them. In other words, the courts are to presume, having regard to the doctrine of separation of powers, that all or any of the grounds were not made out unless the evidence singularly leads to the inevitable conclusion that they have been made. It is only after that threshold is crossed that the AG/PP bears the burden to justify his actions or inactions to the court ...

F [117] Needless to say, the assessment of the law and the facts will depend on the unique circumstances of each and every case. We state again at the risk of repetition that the assessment in each and every case must be made having regard to the doctrine of separation of powers.
(emphasis added)

G [28] The two-step threshold test requires applicants to demonstrate, at the leave stage, that:

- (i) they have a legal basis to challenge the Attorney General/Public Prosecutor's decision, grounded in traditional judicial review principles or precedents; and
- H (ii) they can present compelling, prima facie evidence that the decision or omission falls within these grounds, leading to an inevitable conclusion that the challenge is justified.

I [29] In Sundra Rajoo (supra), the Federal Court affirmed that, while the Public Prosecutor's powers under art. 145(3) are subject to judicial review, any challenge must be backed by clear, compelling evidence that strongly supports overturning the presumption of legality.

[30] At the leave stage, the applicant must provide compelling, prima facie evidence but is not required to conclusively prove that the decision was illegal, procedurally improper, irrational, or made in bad faith. This distinction aligns with the two-stage nature of judicial review, where the court only needs to assess if the applicant has an arguable case at this initial stage. This has been recently affirmed by the Court of Appeal in Muhibbah Engineering (M) Sdn Bhd v. Ketua Pengarah Hasil Dalam Negeri [2022] CLJU 1069; [2022] 1 LNS 1069 which determined that:

[25] With respect, we are unable to agree with the contention of the Respondent that the Court hearing the JR should determine at the leave stage itself whether this is an exceptional case for judicial intervention when the alternative remedy had not been exhausted. To our minds, an important issue of law has been raised as to the correctness of the Respondent's to decision impose the penalty in question on the Appellant and as to whether this is an exceptional case amenable to JR and this is a question that should properly be addressed and decided at the substantive stage on merits. Contrary to the Respondent's contention, we are in agreement with the Appellant that its case as presented is patently an arguable case that should succeed at least at the leave stage. We are inclined to allow the Appellant to proceed to the substantive stage to ventilate the issues of law raised for serious consideration and not to be shut out at the preliminary stage.

(emphasis added)

[31] Therefore, the only issue is whether there is compelling prima facie evidence at present to allow encl. 1 to be heard at the substantive stage.

[32] The Senior Federal Counsel submitted that the principles in Sundra Rajoo (supra) have been applied in the following cases where the Public Prosecutor's prosecutorial discretion was challenged. The High Court, in each of these cases had refused leave due to the absence of compelling prima facie evidence to support the applicants' allegations, and thereafter their failure to satisfy the two-step threshold test. These authorities are:

- (i) Sivakumar Sockalingam & Anor v. Peguam Negara, Malaysia [2023] 1 CLJ 768; [2022] MLJU 2946:

[32] ... (d) In short, the law presumes that the AG acts legally.

(e) The onerous burden lies on the applicants to overcome the strong presumption of legality with compelling prima facie evidence of grounds to review the AG's decision within the recognised reasons for judicial review.

(f) The applicants must come to Court with more than police reports or exhibits of social media postings to overcome the strong presumption of legality. Police reports and social media postings, without more, are not compelling and convincing evidence to rebut the presumption of legality.

- A (g) One instance that the applicants can rebut the presumption is if they can show the elements of mala fide on the part of the AG qua Public Prosecutor when he exercised that discretionary power under art. 145(3).
- (h) The applicants have failed to show any mala fide on the part of the AG qua Public Prosecutor to justify to this Court to review the exercise of his discretionary power.
- B (i) Unlike an ordinary application for leave of judicial review, an application of this nature requires a higher threshold. The applicants have failed to cross this hurdle.
(emphasis added)
- C (ii) Shashi Kumar Shanmugam & Ors v. Ketua Polis Negara, Polis Diraja Malaysia & Anor [2023] CLJU 2275; [2023] 1 LNS 2275; [2023] MLJU 2473:
- D [49] The Applicants must provide more than police reports and excerpts of speeches to challenge the strong presumption of legality. Police reports and edited videos uploaded on social media, without more, do not constitute compelling prima facie or convincing evidence to rebut the presumption of legality.
- E [50] Another way to rebut the presumption of the legality of the AG/PP in exercising his discretion under Article 145(3) of the FC is to demonstrate that the AG/PP acted with mala when making such a decision. However, the Applicants have also failed to show that the AG/PP made the decision with mala fide.
- F [51] As this nature of application requires a higher standard of review, it is my view that the Applicants have failed to cross the high threshold.
(emphasis added)
- (iii) Kartini Farah Abdul Rahim & Anor v. Polis Diraja Malaysia & Ors [2023] CLJU 1913; [2023] 1 LNS 1913; [2023] MLJU 2114:
- G [57] The decision of the AG is cloaked with the presumption of legality. Hence, the burden lies on the Applicants to overcome this presumption. The Applicants must overcome this presumption with a compelling prima facie evidence of the grounds of judicial review that they relied on to review the AG's decision.
- H [58] Therefore, the Applicants must provide evidence beyond a screenshot of a group telegram, google drive consisting of the tortured baby monkeys' videos, a police report, and a BBC's article to overcome this presumption.
- I [59] It is in this Court's view that the Applicants have failed to provide a compelling prima facie evidence to prove their ground in challenging the decision of AG. Consequently, the Applicants have failed to rebut the presumption of the legality of the AG in exercising his power.

[60] Another ground to rebut the presumption of the legality of the AG in exercising his discretion under Article 145(3) of the FC is by showing that there is mala fide on the part of the AG when making the decision. However, the Applicants also failed to show that the AG had made the decision with mala fide.

A

[61] As this nature of the application requires a higher standard of review, it is my view that the Applicants have failed to pass this hurdle.

[33] The applicant in this application for leave to commence judicial review argued that:

- (i) the first respondent had acted ultra vires art. 145(3) of the Federal Constitution and s. 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code; C
- (ii) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers since the impugned decision is unreasonable in the Wednesbury sense and tainted with irrationality; D
- (iii) the impugned decision is irrational and/or unreasonable in the Wednesbury sense, the Attorney General/Public Prosecutor has opted to charge second respondent at the first instance; E
- (iv) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers and in contravention of public interest, due to the fact that substantial amount of time and judicial resources have been exhausted; F
- (v) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers and in the absence of any relevant considerations and/or material to justify the impugned decision; G
- (vi) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers and took into account irrelevant considerations towards the written representations issued by second respondent; H
- (vii) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers since the impugned decision was made based on the second respondent's written representations; I
- (viii) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers by applying for A&D against second respondent, it will stop any possibility of second respondent be re-charged and prosecuted again;
- (ix) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers as the applicant's has been denied for right to be heard prior to the impugned decision been made;
- (x) the first respondent had acted ultra vires his jurisdiction and/or powers since the impugned decision contravened the "Public Prosecutor's Direction No. 2/2019 Directive Pertaining to Discontinuance And Withdrawal of Proceedings, Reduction of Charges and Entering Nolle Prosequi" dated 3 May 2019; and

A (xi) the first respondent had failed to provide the applicant with sufficient basis, reason or particulars to support the making of the impugned decision since he is the complainant in the criminal case and the first respondent has endangered the safety of children by taking into consideration of one side's position only.

B [34] It was also submitted that the court when dealing with a charge under the Sexual Offences Against Children Act 2017 (the 'Act') can convict on the uncorroborated evidence of a child. Section 18 of the provides:

Evidence of child witness 18.

C Notwithstanding anything contrary in any other written law, in any proceedings against any person relating to any offence under this Act, or any offence specified in the Schedule where the victim is a child, the court may convict such person of such offence on the basis of the uncorroborated evidence of a child, given upon oath or otherwise.
(emphasis added)

D [35] It was submitted by the applicant that the applicant's position is relatively strong. While it is up to the trial judge in the criminal case to decide if the elements of the charge under s. 14(a) of the Act are met, the applicant has presented an arguable case. This justifies further examination at the substantive stage to determine if the decision may involve illegality, procedural impropriety, irrationality, or bad faith.

Analysis

F [36] In this application, it was argued that the applicant failed to provide cogent, concrete, and compelling prima facie evidence to support any grounds for judicial review regarding the Attorney General/Public Prosecutor's decision, thus failing to overcome the strong presumption of legality. The claims do not satisfy the two-step threshold test necessary to justify granting leave for judicial review, as they lack substantiating evidence. Further elaboration on these points is provided in subsequent submissions.

G [37] The first respondent's discretion in his prosecutorial decisions is provided for in art. 145(3) of the Federal Constitution reads:

145. Attorney General

H (3) The Attorney General shall have power, exercisable at his discretion, to institute, conduct or discontinue any proceedings for an offence, other than proceedings before a Syariah court, a native court or a court-martial.
(emphasis added)

I

[38] The same power is provided for in sub-s. 254(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and it reads as follows:

254. Public Prosecutor may decline to prosecute further at any stage

(1) At any stage of any trial, before the delivery of judgment, the Public Prosecutor may, if he thinks fit, inform the Court that he will not further prosecute the accused upon the charge and thereupon all proceedings on the charge against the accused shall be stayed and the accused shall be discharged of and from the same.

(emphasis added)

[39] The fact that the second respondent was charged in the Sessions Court does not prevent the first respondent (the Attorney General/Public Prosecutor) from exercising prosecutorial discretion, as s. 254(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code allows discontinuation of proceedings (nolle prosequi) at any stage before the judgment. Since the judgment was not yet delivered, the first respondent was within his discretion to seek an A&D. Although the applicant argued that the first respondent exceeded his powers, they did not specify how or provide compelling prima facie evidence to support this claim. Additionally, the applicant argued that the impugned decision violated Public Prosecutor's Direction No 2/2019.

[40] The applicant's argument is unfounded and lacks merit. Firstly, the direction does not categorically prevent the first respondent from applying for an A&D.

[41] There is no requirement under the law which imposes any legal duty on the first respondent to give any reason in allowing and/or rejecting the representation made by second respondent. (See: Nordin Hj Zakaria (Timbalan Ketua Polis Kelantan) & Anor v. Mohd Noor Abdullah [2004] 2 CLJ 777; [2004] 1 MLRA 387; [2008] 3 AMR 689; [2008] 3 AMR 689; Minister Of Labour, Malaysia v. Sanjiv Oberoi & Anor [1990] 1 CLJ 44; [1990] 1 CLJ (Rep) 200; [1989] 1 MELR 13; [1989] 1 MLRA 278; [1990] 1 MLJ 112; and Pihak Berkuasa Negeri Sabah v. Sugumar Balakrishnan & Another Appeal [2002] 4 CLJ 105; [2002] 1 MLRA 511; [2002] 3 MLJ 72; [2002] 3 AMR 2817).

[42] In the considered view of this court, there is nothing in the application to form a compelling prima facie evidence that the first respondent had acted in contravention of the direction, or any law for that matter, so as to overcome the strong presumption of legality in his making of the impugned decision.

[43] The applicant claims that the first respondent improperly considered the second respondent's written representations after deciding to charge the second respondent in court, assuming there was a preliminary case against them. The applicant argues that these representations should not have been considered. However, to proceed with judicial review, the applicant must provide strong, initial evidence to meet the high threshold required at this

- A stage, especially given the deference to the Public Prosecutor's discretion in such matters. (See: R v. Chief Constable Of The Kent County Constabulary And Another, ex parte L (A Minor); R v. Director Of Public Prosecutions, ex parte B (A Minor) [1993] 1 All ER 756). Before this court, there is nothing to suggest that the first respondent had improperly considered the second respondent's representation.
- B

Conclusion

- [44] For the aforementioned reasons, this court finds that there is no clear evidence in the applicant's affidavit showing that the decision was made irrationally or unreasonably. Therefore, this court is satisfied the necessary legal threshold to challenge the impugned decision has not been met. Consequently, this court dismisses this application to commence judicial review. No order is made as to costs.
